An oasis for seniors in the heart of Atlanta.

What's your ideal senior living scenario? Imagine living somewhere with easy access to everything appealing about the city, but safely removed from congestion. A place in a naturally beautiful setting that offers social engagement as well as security, seclusion and privacy. That place — Canterbury Court — exists today in Buckhead.

Canterbury Court was the inspiration of Frank Player and Margaret Hancock, members of Atlanta's All Saints' Episcopal Church and St. Luke's Episcopal Church, whose vision was to create a community to help cultivate lives of purpose and possibility. A place where people could share social connectedness and opportunities to continue to learn, develop new interests and hobbies, and share new experiences. There would also be a continuum of care available to meet their changing needs.

Today's Canterbury Court.

Our founders' vision became Canterbury Court — Atlanta's original Life Plan Community. Residents here blend a sense of warmth and acceptance with a love of life that keeps them happy and thriving. The lush green space at the community's Buckhead campus creates the perfect setting, especially now during the uncertainty of the COVID-19 pandemic. Residents are able to continue leading lives of purpose, interacting with one another and participating in activities and classes safely through virtual programming, community channel closed-circuit broadcasts, and remote access events. "Because of the vast gardens, we're able to safely have small, socially distanced gatherings," say residents Virgil and Alice. Alice adds, "We'll get together in the garden gazebo for picnics or wine and cheese in the afternoons." Many consider these opportunities a true social advantage at a time when many seniors find themselves spending nearly all their time inside.

In addition to re-imagining activities for residents, Canterbury Court has taken a number of actions to ensure the safety of the entire community, residents and staff alike. "We've set up safety protocols for deliveries and visitation, as well as screening and monitoring protocols to track the status of those on campus," says president and CEO Debi McNeil.

"Canterbury Court has shown itself to be a true community during COVID-19. You've genuinely cared for my mother's physical and emotional well-being."

A smart financial decision.

Residents of Canterbury Court enjoy the simplicity and comfort of knowing that just about everything they need — from housing, dining, maintenance, utility bills, services, entertainment and social activities — is included and consolidated into a single, fixed monthly fee. This provides stability and predictability around monthly expenses and compares favorably to the costs of owning and maintaining a home. A full continuum of care is also available on-site, providing a sense of security and peace of mind for residents of Canterbury Court..

The community has launched a campus expansion plan that will add new apartments for independent living along with new amenities and landscaping. Interest is expected to be high, and you can already secure your place on the list of future residents. If you'd like more information, please call the Canterbury Court marketing office at 404-857-3295.

"We walk the paths in our community garden and work our own plantings — even during COVID-19. Am I happy here? You bet!"
